People and Grasslands Today

People still depend on grasslands today. They eat meat and dairy products from animals raised on grasslands. People hunt native grassland animals for food. Crops, such as wheat, corn, and soybeans, are grown on grasslands. They are used to feed most of the people of the world.

Grasslands provide other opportunities, such as hiking, hunting, and nature viewing. For example, tourists enjoy seeing the elephants, lions, and giraffes of the African savanna. Tourism can help visitors understand and respect grasslands.

The channel page features a vibrant, cartoon-style illustration of a classroom. A teacher with blonde hair sits on a chair, holding a book titled 'All Aps Welcome'. The room is decorated with a large chalkboard that says 'Ms. McVey ESL WELCOME! Raz-Plus Science A-7'. There are various educational items on the walls, including a clock, a Scholastic logo, and several animal-themed cards (giraffe, cheetah, tiger, horse). A globe and a small figurine are on the floor.
